October Message

An RE Teacher called a boy's father to discuss his son's behaviour in class. "When I asked him who knocked down the Wall of Jericho he said, 'Please Sir, it wasn't me.' "

"Listen," the dad replied "If my boy says he didn't do it then he didn't do it! OK?"

Our culture is less familiar with the bible than previous generations. Nonetheless many still hazard an opinion about it without even opening its covers - a number being dissuaded by the oft-repeated claim that you can make the bible say anything that you want it to.

Others perhaps read a bit here and a bit there, before concluding that it's all too complicated for them.

The Christian conviction is that the bible is worth persevering with because Jesus himself considered it to be of supreme importance. He could be scathing about many of the religious traditions of his day. And he saw some of the ways in which the so-called experts of his day interpreted the bible as extremely damaging.

Nonetheless, to Jesus the scriptures, properly understood, were nothing less than the word of God.

These days you can buy a bible for not much more than the cost of a McDonald's meal. Alternatively you can access it online for free. For those who want a bit of guidance – maybe to help them study a part of the bible day by day, I'd recommend www.wordlive.org. As in many churches, we also aim to help people understand the bible aright - this month we're starting a new course especially focussing on that aim.

Few would disagree that the bible has had more influence on how our world is today than any other book. Why not give it a try, to find out why?
